TO: Rudy Kravick (Clerk Court)
FROM: S Felder vs MSG (case 151cv 4038/um)

How are you? I am sending you NY Daily News articles of MSG-J Dolan violating labor laws at workplace, and one of their sponsors Coca Cola outraged about mesuing MSG. Show this to the judge as evidence.

Do you know when a judge will be assigned to the case? I am still seeking legal assistance and want my case to go to trial in front of grand jury.

I want the public to see how disgraceful Radio City Music mistreated minority security officers like myself. This was not about money Rudy. I wanted a transfer because Lisa Marder created hostile working environment, verbally abused me at RCMH.

They made it personal by terminated me without cause last May 2014. Things was so bad for me financially, I had to borrow money from family.

A billion dollar industry like MSG twice deny me unemployment. Then someone from RCMH is telling potential job candidates that I'm a bad worker.

I mailed out over 20 resumes, I'm afraid someone from Radio City is telling potential job candidates bad things about me and that is injustice.

Let me know when the case begins. Me and witnesses wanna sue some employees from MSG, Radio City to testify.

MSG interns to get $795G

MSG CHIEF James Dolan agreed Wednesday to paying $795G to interns who said they were cheated out of proper wages.

More than 1,600 interns who worked for Madison Square Garden between 2007 and 2011 are potentially eligible, according to documents filed in Manhattan Federal Court. New York Knicks and Rangers interns are eligible.

They argued they were improperly classified as interns when they were doing real work, such as handling guest lists, recruiting sponsorships and more. MSG is one of many media and entertainment companies recently sued by interns.

Dolan broke worker laws: judge

BY JENNIFER FERMINO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

CABLEVISION CEO James Dolan violated numerous labor laws when he tried to stop workers in the Bronx from unionizing—including offering raises to employees to persuade them to vote against organizing, a judge ruled Thursday.

Administrative Law Judge Steven Fish of the National Labor Relations Board also found the company was guilty of trying to weaken its Brooklyn workers' union through tactics that included firing nearly two dozen pro-labor workers.

But the judge rejected the most serious allegation from the Communications Workers of America—that Cablevision wasn't bargaining in good faith—and tossed that charge from the complaint.

Dolan personally was found guilty of five infractions, including giving three speeches that tried to discourage workers from unionizing and offering benefits, wage increases and other perks to undercut labor.

Cablevision was cited for six offenses, including the highly publicized firing of 22 technicians in Brooklyn.

The judge ordered the company to give back pay to the technicians, who were eventually rehired.

Dolan personally was told to stop engaging in anti-union behavior.

A rep for Cablevision said it "strongly disagrees" with the judge's findings against Dolan and the company but is happy it was exonerated on some points.

Larry Cohen, the president of the CWA, said the ruling shows the "deliberate law-breaking" of James Dolan.
